FOR NATIONAL DEFENSE—

MILITARY AIR TRANSPORT SERVICE

By LT. GEN. JOSEPH SMITH, USAF
Commander, MATS

FIVE years of progress in global air route support of the Department of Defense—that, briefly, is the story of the Military Air Transport Service as it celebrated its fifth anniversary on 1 June, 1953.

Established 1 June 1948, MATS was the first military organization to integrate into a single command elements of two services, the Navy and the Air Force. The consolidation of two wartime air-transport agencies, the Air Transport Command of the AAF and the Naval Air Transport Service of the Navy, was accomplished in accordance with the Unification Act of 1947.

This consolidation of twin service transport facilities and elimination of duplicating functions made it possible within four months after the establishment of MATS to produce 56 per cent more airlift than the two separate organizations. Three transport divisions: the Atlantic, with headquarters at Westover AFB, Mass., the Continental at Kelly AFB, Tex., and the Pacific at Hickam AFB, T. H., execute the worldwide scheduled and strategic airlift operations.

At the time of consolidation there were within MATS four technical Air Force support services: Airways and Air Communications Service; Air Rescue Service; Air Weather Service; and Flight Service.

Almost immediately after MATS was established in 1948, it was faced with the challenging problem of participation in the Berlin Airlift. Both Air Force and Navy personnel and aircraft were joined in the Combined Airlift Task Force under USAF to provide over the 14 months' duration of the Lift, some 2,325,509 tons of food, fuel and medicine to blockaded Berlin. In addition to the operational accomplishments effected and lessons learned, this airlift was a major factor of demonstrating our Nation's policy of Air Power for Peace.

Since that time MATS' capabilities have been tested in two other major airlifts—the Pacific Airlift in support of the United Nations forces in Korea, and the airlift of high-priority cargo and personnel to support the construction of Thule Air Base in Greenland.

Operating on a skeletonized force in being basis at the beginning of the Pacific Airlift, MATS expanded its Pacific opera-

Army Sec'y Hails Career Personnel Role, Says Profession Must Be Made Attractive

Army Secretary Robert T. Stevens declared yesterday, 12 June, that "the security of America depends in large measure on the competence, zeal and size of the hard core of career officers, warrant officers and non-commissioned officers who furnish the leadership, drive and stability of our Armed Forces."

Speaking at graduation exercises of the Command and General Staff College at Ft. Leavenworth, Kans., Secretary Stevens for the second time in less than a week stressed the need of attracting and retaining high caliber personnel.

Earlier, he had told graduates of Norwich University, Vt., on 7 June that "we must give the men and women in the Army the leadership, training and management which they need to carry out their assignments efficiently. We must look after them in justice and fairness. "A military career must be attractive," Secretary Stevens said at Norwich.

At Ft. Leavenworth yesterday, the Army Secretary, who has repeatedly demonstrated his concern over the problem of Service attractiveness, said that "for the Armed Forces to attract and hold the high caliber people needed, the military must provide careers that compare favorably in prestige, pay, living conditions and security with opportunities offered in civilian life."

Secretary Stevens said "we want to get the complete picture of what is good and what is bad in a military career today and then move to make the profession more attractive."

"I think there are few things we can do that are more important for this Nation's long-term security," he maintained.

In his speech at Ft. Leavenworth, Secretary Stevens stated that despite the reduction in fiscal '54 of 117,000 military spaces in the Army, "I believe that we will be able to maintain not only our present combat strength but, because of new weapons and equipment, we will be able to give the Nation additional security."

He said that "we surely do not intend to decrease our combat strength. Cuts will be made in administrative and supporting elements. We are aiming at added efficiency in these activities."

"If we are to be successful," the Secretary continued, "this effort initially must come from the top and be supported throughout the entire organization. We are moving now in that direction."

PAY RAISE REPORT

The Bureau of the Budget late this week had yet to return to the Pentagon—either with approval or rejection—the proposed legislation to tie military pay to the cost-of-living.

The measure has been at the Bureau since 14 May. Defense Department officials expect to receive the official Administration attitude on a pay raise for the Uniformed Services in the next few days.

House Approves Bill For Retired Families

The House of Representatives on 10 June passed without a dissenting vote the bill to permit personnel of the Armed Services to have the option of relinquishing portions of their retired pay in order that their widows or children, or both, may have continuing incomes after their deaths.

The bill is based on actuarial tables so that it will not represent any additional cost to the government. The cost of the benefits to survivors of retired personnel will be borne entirely by the deductions from the retired pay of those who elect one of the various plans set forth in the bill.

The measure now goes to the Senate where the Committee on Armed Services will give it consideration.

As explained in earlier issues of THE JOURNAL, the amounts to be deducted from the retired pay and the amounts to be paid the widows and/or children varies according to insurance actuarial tables. The bill applies to all categories of personnel, officers, warrant officers, enlisted men, and to reserves, regulars, etc., of the Army, Navy, Air Force, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, Coast and Geodetic Survey and Public Health Service.

In explaining the bill, Representative Cole (R-NY) stated:

"Recognizing that insurance plans and actuarial tables, and the technical language

USMC To Promote 1064 To Lt. Col., Maj. & Capt.

More than one thousand Marine Corps officers will be promoted to the ranks of captain, major and lieutenant colonel during the next two and one half weeks, THE JOURNAL has learned.

The officers concerned were selected by boards which met during the current fiscal year, but promotions were delayed due to a number of factors, including the effects of the Davis Amendment.

Headquarters said this week that 1,064 officers still remain on promotion lists, including 14 who have been selected for promotion to lieutenant colonel, 391 for promotion to major and 978 for promotion to captain. All of these officers, with the exception of 319 of those selected for major, will be elevated to their new rank by 1 July.

Those remaining to be promoted to major will receive their new commissions sometime during the next four months.

Career Report Ready For SecDef Wilson

Defense Secretary Charles E. Wilson, who has apparently already switched his early-year position with regard to a pay raise for military personnel, shortly will receive a report which will recommend additional courses of action he should take to boost Service attractiveness.

A voluminous report, analyzing in detail the history and current status of such matters as pay, dependent care, housing, promotion opportunities, retirement and career prestige, has been compiled.

It is expected to reach Mr. Wilson before the end of the fiscal year on 30 June.

The report has been assembled by a subcommittee of an Inter-Service group under Rear Adm. J. P. Womble, Jr., USN, assigned to the Office of Assistant Secretary of Defense John A. Hannah.

Admiral Womble probably will call a meeting of his committee within the next few days to receive formal comments on the subcommittee document, which then will be transmitted to Dr. Hannah and on to Secretary Wilson.

What is particularly encouraging to Service personnel is the fact that the report, as now drafted, does not merely go over old ground and define and state particular problems.

In each instance, a specific course of action is recommended.

The Womble Committee was created after Secretary Wilson had received the advice of such notable civilian groups as the Incentive Pay Commission, headed by Rear Adm. Lewis L. Strauss, USNR (Inactive), now a White House advisor, and the Rockefeller Commission.

A member of the Rockefeller Commission was General of the Army Omar N. Bradley, Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

On 20 Feb., General Bradley sent to Mr. Wilson a memorandum which pointed to the problem of the decreased attractiveness of a military career and stated that "much can be done to counteract this worsening situation."

Said General Bradley: "It is imperative that we initiate action immediately with a view to developing the best possible data on this career problem so as to be able to bring before the Congress and the people the serious situation which exists in the military services today, together with well-thoughtout recommendations for correcting same."

General Bradley added: "The Joint Chiefs of Staff would like to point out . . . that this whole project should be approached with full recognition of the fact that corrective action will not be forthcoming if our efforts are directed only to a defensive type of operation."

"In other words," continued the JCS Chairman, "emphasis should be placed on seeking out compensating benefits which will reclaim for the military those losses which have reduced the attractiveness of

The War In Korea

THE Communist offensive simmered down to practically a standstill this week as the truce agreement appeared imminent.

Sabre jet pilots had several good days over MIG Alley, and fighter-bombers continued their pasting of enemy targets. The heaviest air raid of the war was staged on Seoul by enemy planes, but the Peiping radio charged the following day that the attack had been "faked" by South Korean President Syngman Rhee as part of his anti-truce campaign. A day-by-day account of the action follows:

Friday—The war's 32d jet ace was crowned as Sabre jets, in a furious battle, shot down eight MIG's, probably destroyed another and damaged five. Maj. Vermont Garrison sent his fifth MIG crashing into the side of a North Korea hill during the fight. On the ground, action was centered chiefly around Anchor Hill on the eastern front where South Korean troops attempted unsuccessfully to take Allied positions captured earlier by the Reds.

Saturday—North Korean Communists penetrated the Allied main line at four points on the eastern front, but South Koreans won about half of it back in savage hand-to-hand fighting.

Sunday—Fighter-bombers loosed eight tons of high explosives on the generator building of the giant Suho dam on the Yalu River. Sabres shot down three MIG's, probably destroyed a fourth and damaged two more. On the ground, South Korean troops fought furiously in a futile attempt to hurl enemy troops from Allied mainline trenches that the Reds seized east of Luke the Gook's Castle on the eastern front.

Monday—The front turned quiet, but nine small single-engine planes slipped in from the northwest and dropped bombs on Seoul, its outskirts and the vicinity of an airfield, killing two persons and injuring at least eight.

Tuesday—Ground action was near a standstill and clouds curbed all air activity.

MATS Complete Five Years of Service

tions until present statistics show that in 33,000 trans-Pacific crossings MATS aircraft have airlifted more than 92,000 tons of mail and critical cargo to the Far East, 470,000 passengers inbound and outbound, and over 57,000 medical patients inbound.

This inbound airlift is probably the most dramatic, consisting as it does of combat casualties and other military patients. The success of this operation has made medical air evacuation a standard procedure in the movement of all military sick and wounded on a global basis. In addition to the humanitarian aspect, it has the military and economic value of making strategic airlift a two-way proposition with vital cargo and personnel moving to the theaters and the return airlift capability utilized in returning military patients to stateside hospitals. This medical air evacuation was recently highlighted by the return of 154 prisoners of war in May released by the North Korean Communists.

Statistically smaller in scope but operationally a more rigorous test of strategic airlift, the MATS movement of personnel and materiel into Thule, Greenland, has been a graphic demonstration of the potential of airlift into isolated areas otherwise not possible to supply because of terrain and extreme climatic conditions. While the air transport service of MATS has been accomplishing these achievements the technical Air Force supporting services have also contributed greatly in the advancement of air power.

During the past five years, Air Weather Service has been providing meteorological and climatological data to the U. S. Air Force and Army units wherever stationed.

To carry out this mission, a net of weather observation stations is spread throughout the northern hemisphere. Observations are made by enlisted weather observers at large and small stations; by observers aboard WB-29 weather reconnaissance aircraft of the AWS, and by automatic weather stations in the Arctic. In addition, information is received from the Navy, the U. S. Coast Guard, the U. S. Weather Bureau and foreign weather services.

To provide such information for strategic and tactical use by the air and ground commanders of today, MATS AWS has over 11,000 men and women, manning approximately 300 weather stations in 26 countries throughout the world. Operating on a global basis, units of Air Rescue Service are performing in consonance with their motto, "That Others May Live."

Most dramatic of this Service's operations are those performed by the Third Air Rescue Group in Korea. From the start of the Korean action on 25 June, 1950 to 30 March, 1953, this Group has effected nearly 9,000 rescues of which nearly 1,000 were from behind enemy lines.

A vital element of air power is the Airways and Air Communications Service. Now 14 years old, the service is heavily committed to the USAF world-wide movement of men and materials to Korea. Less than a month after the beginning of hostilities, AACS had airlifted into Korea more than 300 AACS officers and men skilled in the installation, operation, and maintenance of mobile communications equipment.

Today, AACS performs 19 different kinds of communications services as it operates over 2,000 facilities from some 250 strategic sites around the northern hemisphere.

Currently, the Service is transmitting about 620 million word groups a year on its circuits. About half of this traffic is weather messages. More than a million copies of weather maps are received and transmitted yearly on facsimile equipment.

Domestically, Flight Service activities are carried out through a web of eight strategically located centers which monitor all military flights and act as clearing authority for military flights leaving from locations where other authority is not available. During 1952 alone, FS handled more than 1,850,000 flight plans and passed more than 1,000 test air raid alerts to appropriate agencies. In the interest of safe flying, FS operations officers presented lectures on military and civil flight regulations to nearly 22,000 pilots during 1952.

The Air Resupply and Communications Service (ARCS) was established in February 1951. In peacetime, this service augments the resupply capabilities of theater commanders and during war, its primary function is to conduct psychological warfare and related activities.

The youngest member of the MATS family is the Air Photographic and Charting Service (APCS). Operating various photographic and aerial mapping units throughout the world, this organization is charged with furnishing the overall photographic needs and requirements of the USAF. During 1952, the Service's aeronautical charting units produced more than 60 million charts for distribution to the military services.

Latest development of APCS are special charts, adapted to the use of jet pilots. These charts are much smaller in size than standard charts, and emphasize electronic and other special information the jet pilot requires.

Linked through the common denominator, global air route support, the Military Air Transport Service celebrated its fifth anniversary with business as usual. With some 100,000 personnel, the Military Air Transport Service flies its transport aircraft over 115,000 route miles and provides its technical support services on a global basis in support of Defense Department elements wherever located throughout the world.

the service as a career, rather than on trying to hold on to what we have left."

General Bradley is known to have discussed this problem in person with Deputy Secretary of Defense Roger M. Kyes. In this regard, Mr. Kyes' recent address to the Inland Press Association (THE JOURNAL 3 May) is noteworthy.

Mr. Kyes, who had been critical of military leadership in an earlier address, spoke in an entirely different vein. He praised the devotion to duty of "those fine men and women who have made the military their profession" and said that they are "the most vital element of our national defense."

SecDef Continues To Defend Air Force Cuts

Secretary of Defense Charles E. Wilson said this week that the total money available to the Air Force during fiscal 1954 "will not limit the rapid build-up of our effective Air Force strength."

Climaxing week-long testimony before the Senate Appropriations Committee, Mr. Wilson submitted answers to 32 questions put to him by Senator Margaret Chase Smith (R-Maine). He said it is not planned to cancel any Air Force contracts "for items of equipment which will be actually needed. Any cancellations which will be made with respect to aircraft will be on the basis that such aircraft are not deemed essential to the national security or because of changes in requirements."

Opposes C/S Views

The Defense Secretary's testimony was in direct opposition to that previously furnished the Committee by General Hoyt S. Vandenberg, retiring Air Force Chief of Staff. General Vandenberg said both he and the other members of the JCS had informed Mr. Wilson and President Eisenhower that a 143-wing Air Force is essential to the national security.

Secretary Wilson said "experience with the 143-wing program as it was running to date has indicated that dollars alone will not produce effective combat air wings." He told the Committee members "I am confident you will believe that we will be making real progress when we get to 114 modern wings."

Presidential Backing

The President, speaking at the National Junior Chamber of Commerce convention in Minneapolis, backed Mr. Wilson. He said the new Air Force budget will result in "fewer planes 'on order,' more planes in the air." He said he believed production schedules for the B-47 and the B-52 could be reduced from 26 and 34 months respectively "to something like 18 months."

Mr. Wilson was asked if anyone in the Defense Department has been trying to force the Air Force to reduce its strategic air power. He said "No, although there may be differing opinions among military men, including officers in the Air Force itself, especially as to all of the methods by which strategic air power may be exerted."

JCS Study

This subject, he said, is one "in respect of which I expect the careful study and advice of the new Joint Chiefs of Staff. In that connection, I expect the new Joint Chiefs of Staff will consider the bomb carrying capacities and the ranges of all types of aircraft, and also all other methods of bringing destruction to industrial and behind-the-line support of any enemy."

Mr. Wilson also testified that: the Truman administration had quietly abandoned the immediate goal of 143 wings but had not been honest enough to admit it; he admires General Vandenberg very much and "the country owes him a lot"; the office of Secretary of Defense "is not a popular job. I don't like it very well. I frankly don't enjoy it."

He said if he had called his new budget "a stretch-out like the previous Administration I wouldn't be in all this trouble."

A-Sub Test In '54

The Navy's first atomic submarine, the Nautilus, may put to sea next year.

This disclosure was made by the Chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission, Gordon Dean, late last week in a speech at Atlantic City, N. J.

Discussing the atomic submarine power plant now operating on land at Arco, Idaho, the AEC Chairman said "When the sea-going model of this reactor first turns the screw of the USS Nautilus, probably next year, atomic power will have come of age."

2d Army Engr. Assigned

Col. William C. Hall, who has served in the Office of the Assistant Chief of Staff, G-2, since October 1950, has been assigned as Second Army Engineer, Fort Meade, Md.

He succeeds Col. William N. Thomas, who is retiring from active duty 31 July.

Retired Family Benefits

which must accompany them, are confusing, perhaps it would be well to cite an example of the manner in which this will operate:

"Let us assume that a man 30 years of age is retired for physical disability as a result of combat wounds suffered in Korea. Let us further assume that his annual retired pay is $2,000, that his wife is 25 years of age and that he elects to leave his wife one-half of his reduced retired pay. During his lifetime there will be a 7.1 per cent reduction in his retired pay which amounts to $141 per year. Deducting that from his annual retired pay of $2,000 leaves the sum of $1,859 which is the amount which he will continue to draw during his lifetime. When he dies, this $141, which he has paid each year during his life will provide an annuity of $930 to his widow for the remainder of her life."

"Since the bill was reported, some doubt has been raised as to whether or not the technical language in the bill fully covers all persons who should be permitted to participate in the plan. I refer specifically to reservists and those persons on the honorary retired list who have completed 20 years of satisfactory Federal service but can not draw retired pay because they have not yet attained the age of 60. These persons are in a twilight zone but I want to make it clear that it is the intent of the committee that such persons are fully eligible to participate as soon as they have attained age 60."

"There are a number of other provisions such as those governing mental incompetency on the part of the retired person, and other similar technicalities, but the salient provisions of the bill have been covered."

"For many years the Congress has legislated, almost entirely at the expense of the Government, in favor of those who have devoted some portion of their lifetime to the service of their country. But the widows and orphans of those who have devoted a lifetime to the uniformed services have been miserably neglected. For the first time we have an opportunity to correct this deplorable situation through this legislation which is sound in every respect. The bill comes before you with the unanimous approval of the House Committee on Armed Services and I urge you, with utmost sincerity, to give it your speedy approval."

"The election or the decision rests entirely with the individual. It is his annuity; he has earned it; he may keep it all; he may share it with his wife to the exclusion of the child or children or share it with the children to the exclusion of the wife. He can divide it in any fashion he wants to except he cannot relinquish more than 50 per cent of the reduced amount of his retired pay."

Japanese Village Honors Army Medical Officer

A statue of Col. George W. Hunter, in recognition of his health work in Nagatoishi-cho, has been erected by the residents of that Japanese village.

For centuries, the people of Nagatoishi-cho have been scourged by a disease known as schistosomiasis, which is transmitted by a type of small snail.

In 1947, Colonel Hunter, as head of the Parasitology Department of the 406th Medical General Laboratory, went to Japan. He set out to destroy the snails responsible for spreading the dreaded disease. Within two years, the number of snails had been reduced 99 per cent.

In grateful appreciation, the people of Nagatoishi-cho built a life-size bronze bust of the Colonel resting on a cairn of rough native rock. Colonel Hunter presently is stationed at the Fourth Army Medical Laboratory at the Brooke Army Medical Center, Ft. Sam Houston, Tex.

Sousa Mementos To USMC

The gold-topped baton that was presented to the late John Philip Sousa when he bade farewell to the Marine Band more than 60 years ago has been returned to the Band by his daughters, Jane Priscilla Sousa and Mrs. Helen Sousa Abert.

The baton was delivered to Lt. Col. William S. Santelmann, present leader of the Band, together with three of the "March King's" manuscripts.

All four Sousa mementos were turned over to the band for safekeeping. The baton, headed by a gold Marine Corps emblem which extends from the crown, bears the following inscription: "John Philip Sousa—Presented by the members of the U. S. Marine Band as a token of their respect and esteem, July 29, 1892."

Hand-written scores given to the Marine Band were a partial copy of "Semper Fidelis," an arrangement of the "Star Spangled Banner" prepared for the Marine Band to play at the Yorktown Centennial in 1881 and the "Royal Welsh Fusiliers," which Sousa wrote in 1930 to express Marine Corps appreciation of the Fusiliers' cooperation during the Boxer Rebellion.

Commands Marine Barracks

Navy Building Test Center

A new laboratory for testing Navy turbo jet and turbo prop engines under all simulated flight conditions is being constructed at West Trenton, N. J.

Covering the major portion of 56 acres, the $30-million aeronautical turbine laboratory will be part of the Naval Air Turbine Test Station at West Trenton. When completed it will be able to create artificial altitude conditions ranging from zero to better than 65,000 feet and air conditions approximating the speed of sound. The altitude chambers will be remotely operated through an intricate electronic control system conceived and laid out by engineers from the Minneapolis-Honeywell Regulator Co.

Comdr. Frank K. Slason is superintendent of the new laboratory.

USNR Flag Boards Meet

The Navy convened selection boards this week to name Naval Reserve captains for promotion to flag rank. Being considered by the boards are both inactive duty officers and those on active duty for the training and administration of the Naval Reserve.

Eligible officers are captains of the Line, Medical Corps and Civil Engineer Corps with dates of rank of 10 June 1943 or earlier.

The Navy said the selections are based on a program which is designed "to maintain mobilization requirements in the Naval Reserve in all grades." Under the Armed Forces Reserve Act of 1952, which went into effect on 1 Jan. 1953, the Secretary of the Navy determines the number of officers of flag rank needed in the Naval Reserve to meet planned mobilization requirements.

with a heavier striking load than

—the U.S. Navy's Douglas A3D-1

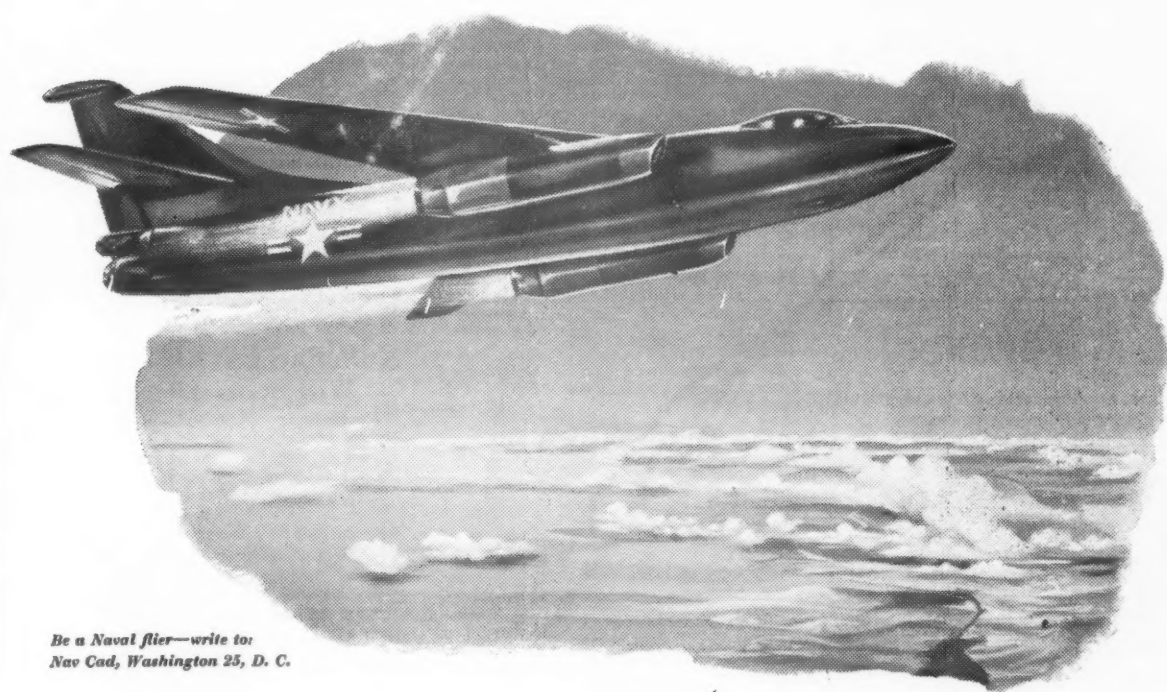

Faster than many jet fighters, the Douglas A3D-1 can lift a bigger bomb load from an aircraft carrier and deliver it farther than any known plane.

First swept-wing jet attack bomber ever built for the Navy, A3D-1 is in the 600 to 700 mph class—and can operate on missions at 40,000 feet. Key to its speed, range, and striking power is the simplicity and lightweight strength of its Douglas airframe—which has already become a springboard for new configurations. A3D-1 has passed its early flight tests, and is already in production for delivery to the United States Navy.

Performance of the A3D-1 is another example of Douglas leadership in aviation. Developing planes that can be produced in quantity—to fly faster and farther with a bigger payload—is the basic rule of Douglas design.

Hesburgh, C.S.C., president of Notre Dame, at the University's 108th annual commencement exercises on 7 June. General Delchmann was cited as a "renowned educator of America's young men in the knowledges and techniques they require for skillful and courageous action in the gallant service upon which we have such immense reliance in these critical times." Thirty-two of Notre Dame's graduating seniors received commissions in the Air Reserve.

DSM For Gen. McKee

Maj. Gen. William F. McKee, recently named Vice Commander of the Air Materiel Command at Wright-Patterson AFB, Dayton, Ohio, on 8 June received the Distinguished Service Medal from General Hoyt S. Vandenberg, Chief of Staff of the Air Force.

General McKee formerly was Assistant Vice Chief of Staff of the Air Force.

The citation follows:
"Major General William F. McKee distinguished himself by exceptionally meritorious conduct in the performance of outstanding service to the United States in a position of great responsibility from 27 September 1947 to 11 May 1953. As Assistant Vice Chief of Staff, U. S. Air Force, General McKee was responsible for the development and implementation of plans and policies affecting the over-all direction and operation of the Air Force. These duties were assumed during the period of the establishment of the Department of the Air Force as a separate military arm and the subsequent rapid expansion of the Air Force as a result of the Berlin Airlift and the Korean operation. His superior administrative supervision of the Air Staff and his acceptance of the heavy responsibilities of his office were a major factor in the rapid but effective growth of the U. S. Air Force. In discharging his duties in such a superior manner General McKee made a substantial contribution to the future security of this nation and his actions reflect the highest credit upon himself and the U. S. Air Force."

Inst. of Tech. Graduates 47 in Installations Course

Forty-seven student officers, including three from the Chinese Nationalist Air Force and two from the Royal Hellenic Air Force, were graduated recently from the USAF Institute of Technology's Installations Engineering School at Wright-Patterson AFB, Ohio.

Brig. Gen. Stanley F. Wray, Deputy Director of Installations for the USAF, was the principal speaker at the graduation exercises. He praised the USAF Institute of Technology as an outstanding engineering school and said that much of the present and future success of the Air Force depends directly on its graduates.

The speaker stressed the importance of air bases as one of the three pillars of air power, along with planes and manpower, and enumerated some of the special problems which are challenging the ingenuity of today's installations engineer. In this category he placed the noise of jet aircraft, space for the longer runways required by today's heavier aircraft, damage to runways by spillage of jet fuel and blast action of jet after-burners, increased rate of fueling and defueling required by tactical operations, and air base construction in the Far North.

General Wray urged the graduates to apply the human engineering they have learned as well as the mechanical, electrical and others, and to constantly strive to organize the people and equipment available so as to achieve maximum utilization.

The speaker was introduced by Col. A. M. Musgrove, Jr., Chief of the Installations Engineering School. Brig. Gen. Ralph P. Swofford, Jr., Commandant of the USAF Institute of Technology, awarded diplomas to the graduates.

Leading the class were three distinguished graduates: Capt. H. H. Galliett, Jr., 2d Lt. W. E. Rains, and Capt. R. E. Sieg.

Gen. Spaatz Heads New AF Historical Foundation

An Air Force Historical Foundation has been established to preserve "materials depicting the history and traditions of the USAF."

General Carl A. Spaatz, USAF-Ret., former Air Force Chief of Staff, was elected first president of the new organization, which will be non-profit and privately supported. Membership is open to the general public as well as military personnel.

The Foundation will "recognize the contributions of the men who, through half a century, have devoted their lives to the Air Force," General Spaatz said.

"It will enrich the air annals of the American people by the voluntary preservation of significant materials depicting the history and traditions of the USAF, which otherwise would not be saved for posterity," he added.

The decision to found the society was made after a meeting between General Hoyt S. Vandenberg, Air Force Chief of Staff, and a group of Air Force personnel and civilian aviation leaders.

Secretary of the Air Force Harold E. Talbott, General Vandenberg and other Air Force officials were invited to serve as ex-officio members of the Foundation's Board of Trustees.

General Spaatz, Maj. Gen. H. C. Pratt (Ret.), and Brig. Gen. T. D. Milling (Ret.) signed the certificate of incorporation and drafted the constitution and bylaws of the organization.

Officers elected, in addition to General Spaatz, were: Lt. Gen. Idwal H. Edwards (Ret.), 1st vice president; C. R. Smith, 2nd vice president; Gill Robb Wilson (Ret.), 3rd vice president, and Maj. Gen. St. Clair Streett (Ret.), treasurer.

A Nominating Committee, headed by Lt. Gen. Richard E. Nugent (Ret.), presented a slate of nominees for election as trustees. The following were elected to serve on the Board of the Foundation: Former Secretary of Defense Robert A. Lovett, Senator Stuart Symington, General Spaatz, Gen. George C. Kenney (Ret.), Lt. Gen. Hubert R. Harmon, Gen. C. B. Stone, Lt. Gen. William E. Kepner (Ret.), General Edwards, Honorable Harold C. Stuart, Maj. Gen. R. L. Copsey, Maj. Gen. William F. McKee, Maj. Gen. Benjamin D. LEADERSHIP DEMANDS CONSTANT ACHIEVEMENT

More defense for your dollar...

U.S. Air Force delivers it with Lockheed Starfire

Here's a military jet that does an outstanding job—and saves money in the process—the F-94C Starfire, a reliable new interceptor for home defense.

Economy is important with the Air Force, and here's how the Starfire helps on the budget.

An economical airplane is one that performs its mission with greatest efficiency and offers maximum availability on the ready line. Maximum time between servicings means lower maintenance costs. More important, it means that fewer planes are needed. The U. S. Air Force provides both types of economy with the Starfire.

Since the Lockheed Starfire is a 2-place interceptor, it utilizes the cooperative efficiency of a 2-man team to compute the tactical problem and perform all the other split-second operations of intercepting an enemy at 600 mph-plus speeds.

No fighter-interceptor can get into the air quicker—none can climb faster—a valuable combination that saves vital minutes in reaching enemy bomber level.

The all-weather Starfire is equipped with automatic electronic controls—Hughes Radar System, Westinghouse Automatic Pilot, Sperry Zero Reader—and other advanced devices, making it very nearly an automatic airplane.

Reports coming in from the field indicate that Lockheed has again produced a "pilot's airplane." Air Force pilots like the Starfire and like to fly it. They find it simple to fly and rock-steady under actual instrument conditions.

Here is the happy combination of 4 important factors in one reliable airplane: (1) Superlative performance—(2) Easy maintenance—(3) Pilot popularity—(4) More defense for your dollar.

"We want to get the complete picture of what is good and what is bad in a military career today and then move to make the profession more attractive."—
SECRETARY OF THE ARMY ROBERT T. STEVENS.

Research—the Basic Building Blocks. It is regrettable that Secretary of Defense Charles E. Wilson, in rapid fire defense of his reductions in the defense budget, has been placed in the position of appearing to cast slurs on the value of research. He was quoted in the press as stating that research covers a multitude of stupid projects. The Secretary explained his research and development cuts are in "pure research." He quoted an industrial associate as saying that pure science, if successful, could not be of any possible use to those who put up the money for it and that that was what makes it "pure."

The fact is that lack of research has always been one of our military weaknesses. Even today, with the lesson of World War II behind us, we are still devoting precious little to research. Most of what we call research actually comes under the heading of development. Back in April, Dr. Hugh L. Dryden, Director of the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics, put it succinctly in his testimony before the Senate Appropriations Committee. He pointed out that of the $930 million funds for aeronautical research and development, which is more than half the military research and development program, only about $25- to $30-million is for research, the rest being for development. "Of the funds which are called research and development in military appropriations," Dr. Dryden said, "only about three per cent is research, and 97 per cent is development."

At the close of the war, the United States, fresh from the impact of new German weapons arising from their careful pre-war research, was very conscious of the subject. In July 1945 a Senate Subcommittee on War Mobilization stressed the vital importance of pure or basic research as "a field of public responsibility, because basic research is seldom immediately profitable, although the application of such research may be of enormous value—only in this way can we become independent of German science upon which we have leaned so heavily in the past." When we consider the use still being made of captured German research data (in guided missiles, and the USSR in submarines for example) it should impel us to intensify our science programs.

We believe that Mr. Wilson, on more deliberate consideration, would agree that we must carry on a continued strong program of both research and development.

Understanding the Service. In less than five months as Secretary of the Army, Mr. Robert T. Stevens has demonstrated an understanding of the Service and its problems that augurs well for the future of the Army in these precarious times.

Fortunately for the Army, Mr. Stevens entered on his Secretaryship with unusual qualifications. He had served as a 19-year-old second lieutenant in World War I and as a colonel in World War II. In the periods between the wars, and since, he maintained a patriotic interest in National Defense and kept up-to-date on matters concerning both material and personnel. He thus had the advantage not only of a studious knowledge of the Army but also of an appreciation of that combination of idealism and practicality which traditionally motivates the career soldier. Thus equipped, he can work with the professional career personnel to produce the best results for the National Defense.

Mr. Stevens' action in going to Ft. Leavenworth yesterday to speak at the graduation ex-

Praise House Group on PX Stand

Editor, THE JOURNAL:

I think the stand of the Armed Services Subcommittee on exchanges headed by Representative William Hess of Ohio in refusing to be pressed into reducing PX privileges is an admirable one. The American Retail Federation represents only a small minority of the nation's retailers. Based on the flimsiest of charges, they endeavor to snip further benefits from the man in uniform. The Exchange Service fought back by simply presenting the true facts to the Committee. The Exchange Service has always taken the stand that it has nothing to hide, that it welcomes queries concerning its operation. Too often a selfish but highly vocal minority such as the ARF can force its will on the majority.

The PX hearings proved that this Armed Services Committee can sift fact from fantasy. They gave a fair hearing to both sides and from this emerged a victory for the man in uniform. For the first time in many years the trend toward stripping the soldier and airman of fringe benefits of military life has been halted. The House Armed Services Committee merits a vote of thanks for its courageous stand.

Incentive Pay

Editor, THE JOURNAL:

I cannot believe that the complex problem of incentive pay for physicians and dentists was clarified by the letter in the 16 May issue of THE JOURNAL.

The plain facts are that incentive pay is incentive pay, whether rendered to physicians, flyers, industrial executives, divers or TNT truckers. Its prime purpose is to draw personnel into a particular field. The usual considerations involved are those of special hazard or of difficulty in obtaining trained personnel. Many pertinent factors must be considered in discussing the touchy issue of incentive pay, but the basic economic fact, presented above, should not be ignored.

The medical profession is one of the most highly organized and influential groups in existence in the United States at this time. When one considers the power of this group and the $11,000 and $14,000 median salaries reported by that fraction of the profession which responded to recent annual surveys, one comes much closer to the basic reason for incentive pay for medical officers.

Now, I would be among the last to raise futile cries against this state of affairs. "Them's the conditions that prevails." These are the conditions that not only the Medical Service of the Military, but any state-supported medical service, has to grapple with. But let us at least face this fact and not take refuge behind the arguments of long training and "equalization" of pay.

At least five unfortunate actualities prevail against the "equalization" argument.

(1) Many men who have invested in long and expensive training are drafted as privates. I refer to men with Ph. D.'s in really difficult scientific fields. They are highly trained and their training is more seriously interrupted than in the case of physicians and dentists who remain in their professions.

(2) A smaller number of scientists with the Ph. D. have been commissioned, but without incentive pay. I speak of veterinarians (despite Lt. Chambers statement), biochemists, bacteriologists, psychologists, etc. Does "equalization" apply to these men? The fact is that they have no bargaining power, as the Strauss committee realistically recognized.

(3) A large number of physicians and dentists were trained partly or completely at government expense during and after World War II, and do receive longevity pay for their training time. Should they receive incentive pay?

(4) The "equalization" argument, by definition, can apply only to those making a lifetime career of the Service. Relatively few physicians and dentists anticipate this.

(5) Incentive pay has followed the economic laws of any financial inducement, i.e., it is directly related to the alternative civilian reward. Let civilian reward become great and incentive pay appears. Let civilian reward diminish and incentive pay declines or is absent.

I do not intend my remarks to be critical of a great profession. Individual motivations, both in and out of the medical field, frequently include much more than economic determination. This does not negate an ever present economic factor. Those responsible for military medical care are, of course, caught in the giant nut-cracker of competition between civilian and military needs and rewards. Incentive pay is a partial answer and an expedient one, but is not further dignified by attaching a new label to it.

"REGULAR ARMY OFFICER"

cers, warrant officers and non-commissioned officers who furnish the leadership, drive and stability in our Armed Forces." He realizes, he said, that the military must provide "careers that compare favorably in prestige, pay, living conditions and security with opportunities offered in civilian life."

With this understanding and sympathetic approach to his problem—which is indeed a large one in these days of budget reductions—one may expect that Mr. Stevens will produce the best possible results for the Army and the Nation.

IN THE JOURNAL

10 Years Ago—

Announcement was made yesterday of the surrender of the garrison on the island of Pantelleria. Pantelleria gave up after 18 days of constant bombardment from the air and shelling from the sea.

50 Years Ago—

A broad general classification of the graduates of the Military Academy, up to date, shows that West Point has given us one President and a candidate for Vice-President, 8 Presidential electors and four members of the Cabinet, 29 diplomatic representatives, 24 members of Congress, 122 other Federal officers, 18 Governors and Lieutenant Governors, 85 members of State legislatures, 124 civil and 178 military officers of States, 64 city officials, 230 educators, 236 railroad officials, 233 civil engineers, 214 judges and lawyers, 22 clergymen, and 50 men of other professions, 268 business men, 230 farmers and planters and 172 authors.

85 Years Ago—

So far from "our leading influences" being "thirsty for war," the General of the Army has just signaled himself by declaring in memorable terms "Let us have peace." The watchword of the hour through the country is peace, not conquest. Falsifying the prediction that the Army would seek to control the nation by military force, as have the successful armies of history, the million and more of citizen soldiery were quietly absorbed into the general people; and they have never sought to be anything but patriots.

"Restore Military Man to Position of Security And Respect He Deserves," Says Editorial

Following is the text of an editorial on Service Attractiveness published in the 16 May issue of the Louisville, Ky., Courier-Journal.

"Today is Armed Forces Day. We shall hang out the flags. The men in uniform will march for review, and stand in long, patient lines while, in keeping with the ritual, the nation utters tired and time-worn words of praise for them and their deeds. And perhaps they will smile, knowing how soon both words and deeds will be forgotten.

"The fighting man, as Kipling pointed out in his bitter salute to the British Tommy Atkins, understands and accepts public ingratitude as an inevitable part of the soldier's rough fare. Since men took up arms, the wartime protector has been the problem of peace, but seldom in history have men-at-arms been more harshly handled, or more deserving of gratitude, than the military men of the United States today.

"Since they won the gratitude of the free world eight years ago, our armed forces had to defend themselves not only against the enemy but against a public that has never sufficiently understood military life. The misguided laments of indulgent mothers undermined morale. Congressional and journalistic interference made difficult the imposition of the necessarily rigid discipline which steadies men under fire and saves their lives and their cause. Efforts to curb the powers of commissioned and non-commissioned officers, to 'democratize' the essentially hierarchical military structure, have complicated the already-difficult period of transition from civil to military life, and served to weaken the lines of disciplinary command on which any military force depends.

"Unfortunately, we have shown no such concern for the economic existence of our fighting men. While struggling to keep our own incomes abreast of inflation, we have ignored the effect of inflation on the military man, and especially on the commissioned ranks. Formerly, a military or naval career was made attractive by the security, dignity and relative comfort that compensated for the wartime danger and peacetime tedium of military life. But a military career today means sacrifice by the officers' families as well as by the officers themselves.

"Extra officers' pay for overseas and ship-board duty has been reduced. Repayment to officers being transferred for the transportation of effects and families has been curtailed. And, as a final blow to officer morale, Congress has frozen thousands of officers in their present rank, making normal promotion impossible and robbing them of their greatest incentive.

"These are not the only signs of our strange affection for the man in uniform. Shedding tears for our boys in Korea, upon their return, we have let them live in barns and cattle-sheds.

"Politics has shaken the top ranks of our military with an unprecedented force. Since the MacArthur hearings there has been an increasing tendency for Congress to influence the selection of military leaders and planners for their political views rather than their military excellence. Military success is coming to depend not on the officer's knowledge of military science but on his views on foreign policy, a field in which military men have no business and usually no aptitude.

"It is time for the public and Congress to stop treating the armed forces of this country as a political and emotional plaything, and to restore the military man to the position of security and respect that he deserves."

Army Sec'y Hails Career Personnel

carrying out our missions at less cost," Secretary Stevens nonetheless held that "there is a much more vital element in our National security that we are not overlooking."

He said he referred "to the fine men and women in the Army. My association with the U. S. Army goes back some 35 years." Mr. Stevens, a WWII colonel, related, "During that time it has been my privilege to know a good many Army people of all ranks and grades. I have a high regard for those people who have chosen the military life as their profession."

In his address at Norwich, Secretary Stevens made the point that "there is no more solemn trust than the command of American soldiers."

"Managers, supervisors and foremen are leaders in the general sense of exercising authority," he said, "but leadership in business and industry is one thing; leadership in the Army is another."

Mr. Stevens explained that "the authority of an employer or supervisor in civilian life is not what we call 'command authority,' because it does not represent a government's power to enforce law."

"The authority of a military command-der in the U. S. Army," he continued, "has its source in law, making him an agent of the government and of our people."

Secretary Stevens, with his decades of experience in military procedures, emphasized at Norwich that "a commander's authority cannot be separated from his responsibility. For a military commander," he said, "there is no clock signalling the end of the day."

"The commander's authority and responsibility extend around the clock, applying not only to the soldier's military duties but to everything affecting his fitness and his readiness to perform those duties. This authority imposes equally high responsibility for its proper exercise."

"Everything a commander does in his official capacity," Secretary Stevens told the Norwich graduates, many of them entering active duty as lieutenants, "may be related to a future moment of crisis when his decision and his men's readiness to act on it, will provide the final test of his ability to command and the success or failure of his mission."

MC Officer to Indus. College

Col. Bryan C. T. Fenton, Executive Officer at Brooke Army Medical Center, Ft. Sam Houston, Tex., since June 1950, will attend the Industrial College of the Armed Forces at Fort Leslie J. McNair, Washington, D. C., for the 1953-1954 school year. He will report in August.

Before coming to Brooke Army Medical Center, Colonel Fenton was assigned to Headquarters, European Command at Heidelberg, Germany for two years where he was Executive Officer and later Chief of the Plans and Operations Division in the Office of the Chief Surgeon. Before his European assignment, Colonel Fenton was on duty at BAMC as Deputy Director of Training at Medical Field Service School.

Truce Imperiled by ROK

SOUTH KOREA, itself, at this writing, remains the considerable barrier to the truce, and one not easily removed as the official and also the mass protests proved—inevitable as the truce is. The little republic, even if its collective mind is made up by a very few people, is experiencing a national chagrin undeniable by its largest and most generous ally. For the boundary line being determined, on however temporary and tentative a basis, happens to be approximately in the middle of the Korean peninsula, and the majority of the individual troops still eager to force that line much farther north, happen to be Koreans. Those are considerations which are not overlooked by Syngman Rhee and which cannot be ignored by the largest ally, or by history; America has a responsibility for persuading Korea that the proposed arrangement has large virtues for that unhappy country, as well as bitter disappointments to long-held Korean hopes. That, fortunately, is the fact.

Our powers to persuade are seriously handicapped by circumstances we cannot even pretend to overlook. All the high performances by our military personnel have still been insufficient to gain that resounding victory for which the South Koreans naturally yearned. The most earnest diplomatic efforts, too, have been insufficient to win more than a moderate break with the obdurate Reds. Economic and administrative aid has been pitifully inadequate to restore South Korea to a tolerable living, and obviously will be inadequate for a long time to come and under the most favorable conditions. Beyond this, the accident has an immense moral responsibility for retaining the respect of Asian neutrals, upon whose attitude (rather than upon us alone) will depend the future political and military behavior of Asia. We must show strength, plus something more than justice, rather than less, and the acts of this month will cast a very long shadow over the future of the Far East. This is clear to President Eisenhower; it must be made clear to hasty critics of his policy.

ITALIAN VOTERS this past week-end returned to power the Centrist bloc (headed by Premier De Gasperi's Christian Democrats) but by a margin so painfully narrow as to prevent earning the "bonus" on which the Government forces had been counting. (The bonus referred to is an ingenious device whereby a party getting full 50 per cent of the popular vote is automatically entitled to 380 of the 590 deputies—thereby gaining a good working margin which prevents upsets of a government on trivial causes such as have repeatedly wrecked governments in France).

Unable to assemble a majority, the Christian Democrats now must count almost unfailingly upon the 41 lesser-party votes in the Centrist bloc; if a dozen of them should shift on some issue De Gasperi could be ousted as completely as French premiers have been ousted since 1945. It is an unfortunate weakness for a season which calls for a continuance of such bold leadership as De Gasperi has exercised in the past.

THERE ARE varying diagnoses of the vote, to explain why a premier who in a few astonishing years has led his nation out of the sloughs and into a position of respectability in the concert of nations should have lost rather than gained ground. None can ignore the fact that much the largest gains were among the Rightists, the Monarchists picking up 27 new posts and the neo-Fascists 23. The Leftist bloc is larger, but its gains (11 for the Communists and 27 for the left-Socialists) were less impressive than those of the reactionary elements, Monarchists who are obviously going nowhere, but whose stupidity has put the Communists in a strong position. A factor is the voting-law, by which young people of 21 can vote for the Chamber, whereas only those of 25 can vote for the Senate (where De Gasperi holds a slightly more comfortable position). And young people are more easily swayed by oratory, at which, if nowhere else, the Rightist parties in Italy excel. De Gasperi holds on, fortunately, and it remains faintly possible that his sound thinking and bold leadership will continue to dominate, even in a less favorable parliamentary situation. Italy still has much to do.

FRANCE meantime continues in search of a premier capable of gathering a majority long enough to take office, however briefly. The fifth effort, to get Georges Bidault accepted, was a near-miss, lacking a single delegate; the Chamber's refusal to take the veteran Bidault was due to much the same circumstance that defeated Reynaud's attempt last month—a request for special powers to act for one year by decree without any interference by the Chamber, primarily to effect a budget balance by much-needed but still-deferred tax reforms. With unwonted asperity on the part of a man seeking office, Bidault had pointed to France's weakening role in world affairs as a result of her grotesque inability to organize a durable government; this demand for supra-legislative powers, plus the restatement of a notorious but painful fact, was more than the wavering deputies' self-esteem could stand. With Communist, Socialist and Gaullist aid they defeated Bidault. President Auriol, still hoping to get a premier in time for the Bermuda meeting (which otherwise he himself must attend), is bravely looking for a sixth candidate for a short-term job.

GENERAL RIDGWAY, in his formal annual report as Supreme Allied Commander in Europe, this week again warned the fourteen nations of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization that the allied air forces remain seriously distant from their goal, and still are "the weakest link in our defense." There is an obvious tendency in Europe to look with misgivings upon the sharp reduction of the U. S. Air Force budget, despite the firm declaration of President Eisenhower and Secretary of Defense Charles E. Wilson, that the reduction will prove to be of unused funds rather than of required appropriations. There also is a corresponding tendency in Europe to stretch out to a degree the provision of European planes and pilots, and nothing in General Ridgway's report (his last annual report in that office, as he leaves on 13 July) was intended to conceal knowledge of that fact. His report noted realistically the continuing advances of Red combat elements of ground, sea, and air forces alike, and dealt firmly with the need for comparable advances in Allied elements, and in "the driving force of dynamic leadership sustained by high morale throughout the civilian populations." His summation of Red advances noted especially the building-up of satellite strength, including a total of 1,300,000 men in 70 divisions, against 1,000,000 in 65 divisions in early 1952.

SERVICE NEWS AND GOSSIP

"Tiger" Teague of the Inf. Praises AF Chief—One of the top infantrymen in the U. S. Congress, Representative Olin E. "Tiger" Teague (D-Tex.), a WWII colonel, this week inserted in the Congressional Record a booming tribute to General Hoyt S. Vandenberg, Air Force Chief of Staff.

Representative Teague declared that General Vandenberg's testimony on the fiscal '54 budget "has set an example of soldierly behavior that is in the finest American tradition."

Mr. Teague said:

"There are two sides to the question of proposed budget cuts, the side presented by the Secretary of Defense, and the other side—supported by the Air Force. General Vandenberg has presented the Air Force side with the courage and the firmness expected of a soldier. But what is more important, as Chief of Staff he has taken action only through the proper channels. He has not gone over the head of anybody; he has not protested when a protest was out of order; he has not played the role of a martyr; and he has refused to get into personal tangles with his Commander in Chief.

"Whatever he has said in disagreement with the Secretary of Defense he has said from the proper rostrum, the committee room of the Senate Appropriations Committee, and he has said it only in answer to specific questions put by the proper authority, the members of that committee. This is the way for a military man to oppose his civilian superiors in a democracy. And it sets an example which, if followed, will restore to the military profession any luster or prestige that may have been lost in the post-war years."

Who Will Be Cinc Pac?—Speculation is rife in the upper echelons of the Navy regarding a possible successor to Admiral Arthur W. Radford as Commander in Chief of the Pacific.

Prominently mentioned for the post are three Naval Aviators: Admiral Donald B. Duncan (present Vice CNO), Vice Adm. Matthias B. Gardner (Deputy CNO for Operations) and Vice Adm. John H. Cassady (who commands the Sixth Fleet in the Mediterranean). Another contender is a "black shoe" officer, Vice Adm. Robert P. Briscoe, already in the Pacific area as Commander of Naval Forces, Far East.

Admiral Duncan is the only four-star officer being considered for the assignment and the only full admiral (with the exception of Admiral Robert B. Carney, who becomes CNO) who has not commanded one of the fleets. Another factor in his favor, according to observers, is that Admiral Carney may want to bring his own deputy. Admiral Duncan will complete his second year as Vice CNO on 10 Aug., five days before Admirals Radford and Carney take over their new posts, and numerous officers are betting on his appointment to the coveted assignment.

Backers are almost as numerous, however, for Admirals Cassady, Gardner and Briscoe, and each supporter voices sound reasons to "prove" that his candidate will be named. Many think, however, that the two aviators have a greater chance of selection than Admiral Briscoe since the Atlantic Fleet is commanded by a "black shoe" man. The inside edge seemingly goes to Admiral Gardner.

A Changed Atmosphere—With the conclusion of the public testimony on the fiscal '54 budget this week and the forceful, but entirely within bounds, presentation of the two sides of the Air Force budget picture, it can be expected that Defense Secretary Charles E. Wilson now will take vigorous action to establish closer teamwork among the civilian and military leaders of the Armed Forces.

In the rush which attended the budget revision process and the necessity for the new civilian leaders to learn at a hurried pace the complicated details of their new jobs in a new environment, the vital problem of developing mutual confidence between the civilian and military officials seemingly did not receive proper attention. As a result, there were evidences of misunderstanding. At least one address by a top civilian official was widely interpreted as an attack on the so-called "Pentagon Brass." Many newspaper editorials challenged this approach.

Observers covering the budget testimony this week noted that on several occasions Secretary Wilson and his top aides made a special point to express their understanding of the viewpoint of the military officials with whom their testimony was in conflict.

It is possible as the new JCS launches its inquiry this summer into the over-all problem of defense forces, notably the roles and missions of the various Services, that Secretary Wilson, as did Secretary James V. Forrestal at Key West and Newport, may meet with his top military advisors in a locality far removed from Washington and the Pentagon.

Step Up Korea I&E Program—Military officials this week were polishing plans for accelerating the Troop Information & Education and Special Services program in Korea, if truce is achieved. In addition to increased concentration on field training, troops would be afforded opportunities for more on and off-duty education under a truce.

Absence of fighting would provide the Army with an ability to step up classes in reading, writing and arithmetic—the so-called basic program—and extending through all levels to the college correspondence courses.

About one out of every seven top three-graders in the Army does not possess the equivalent of an eighth grade education. The chances are that such non-coms in Korea will go to school if there's a truce.

Many of these men have demonstrated outstanding ability as combat leaders, but now require additional education to permit them to perform different type duties—for example, training other troops and giving recruits the benefit of their combat experience.

The much-praised I&E program for U. S. forces in Korea will be speedily adjusted to the new situation if a truce develops. Lt. Gen. Maxwell D. Taylor, from 1945 to 1949 the Superintendent of the U. S. Military Academy, is known to have conferred on this subject in detail during recent weeks with I&E chiefs in Korea and Japan and with representatives from the Pentagon.

Simultaneously with an expansion of the I&E program, there would also be an expansion of the athletic programs. Armed Forces personnel serving in Korea under a truce can certainly look forward to organization of numerous leagues in all sports.

But whatever the added emphasis on the I&E and Special Services programs, training for combat would have top priority. A truce would not mean an end to climbing hills for soldiers and Marines in Korea.

To Journal Readers

...When announcement is made of a new CG for the SECOND ARMY at Ft. Meade, Md. (the position has been filled on an "acting" basis since 30 April), the key assignment is expected to go to a CORPS COMMANDER in Korea, probably Lt. Gen. I. D. White (X Corps) or Lt. Gen. Reuben E. Jenkins (IX Corps). It may be that both of these officers will get ARMY ZI COMMANDS, since Lt. Gen. John E. Dahlquist (The Journal, 6 June), Fourth Army CG at Ft. Sam Houston, Tex., reportedly will replace retiring Gen. John R. Hodge at Army Field Forces. Gens. White and Jenkins will complete ONE-YEAR TOURS as Corps CG's in August.

"What will the telephone
be like
when I grow up?"

It's hard to say, young fellow, but you can be sure there are great things ahead.

Today we telephone from moving automobiles, trains, airplanes and ships far out at sea. And radio microwaves beam telephone calls and television programs from tower to tower across the country.

The day is coming when you will be able to reach any telephone in the country simply by dialing a number.

Perhaps some day in the future you may just speak the number into the transmitter and get your party automatically.

ANOTHER REASON ALLISON LEADS IN THE AIR

Heat and pressure combine to form a perfect weld.

Here's how we get more perfect welds

To join the separately forged turbine wheel and shaft of a jet engine into one integral part, this specially designed flash welding machine heats the joint electrically to fusing temperature. Then, under 120 tons' hydraulic pressure, the two parts are welded into a perfect unit.

This unique automatic welding process—the most uniform and economical method known—is applied by Allison engineers to get stronger, more perfect welds. It eliminates the air pockets, voids and slag common to manual welds.

Lowering J33 turbine wheel and shaft into special flash butt welding machine.

POWER HOUSE

The heart of Philco Microwave is this "Power House" klystron... with it Philco has the highest equipment power output in the 6000-7500 mc band... generating a full watt of output power it provides Philco Microwave systems with a reliability safety margin of 30 decibels (1000 to 1)... greater assurance of performance under any and all field conditions.

Philco's exclusive feedback design makes possible full use of this powerful klystron... requires the use of only two of these klystrons for simultaneous two-way transmission and reception... minimizes cumulative distortion and noise with numerous repeater stations. In combination with other Philco features such as custom-sized, high gain, antenna-reflector systems and operation in the preferred and interference free frequency band, the result is reliable, high quality communications.

Look to Philco Microwave for the answer to your communications requirements.

Rubber: 1,800 lbs.

Copper: 2,000 lbs.

A single blast from a 105 mm. howitzer can reduce a pillbox to smoldering silence! This tremendous firepower is awesome... only a mount of great strength can withstand its recoil.

to the time they're ready for action.

AMF is pleased to make its contribution to Army Ordnance. Along with thousands of other companies we are utilizing industrial skill and speed to insure America's military readiness.

AF Cancels Contracts For Twin-Engine Trainer

The Air Force announced on 11 June cancellation of contracts for manufacture of 193 T-36 trainers by the Beech Aircraft Corporation of Wichita, Kans., and 227 T-36's previously ordered from Canadair, Ltd., of Montreal, Canada.

The Air Force said that two T-36's being built by Beech will be completed as prototypes for test purposes.

Powered by two piston engines, the T-36 was contemplated for use in advanced training. A Pentagon announcement said "this aircraft was originally scheduled for production to meet specialized training requirements."

The statement added: "It is being eliminated by the Air Force from the production program since it has been determined that the requirements for which it was designed can be handled satisfactorily by other aircraft."

The Beech Aircraft Corp. said the T-36 was to have gone into production late this year. Only a few hundred employees will be immediately affected by the cancellation, it was stated.

Col. Watts R.C.A. V.P.

W. Walter Watts has been elected vice president in charge of Technical Products, and Theodore A. Smith has been chosen vice president in charge of Engineering Products Department of the RCA Victor Division of the Radio Corporation of America.

During WW II, Mr. Watts served as Colonel and Commanding Officer of the Signal Corps Distribution Agency and as a Signal Corps Procurement Director for which he was awarded the Legion of Merit.

After the Korean war broke out, he was granted a leave of absence from RCA to serve with Maj. Gen. William H. Harrison, then Defense Production Administrator, in Washington, D. C.

Powerful Motors Will Make Big Wind at Tullahoma

Two huge motors—perhaps the largest ever built—have been installed at the Propulsion Wind Tunnel Facility at the Air Force's Arnold Engineering Development Center, Tullahoma, Tenn., where they will be employed in the construction of the world's largest rotating machine.

The two motors, which stand as high as a two-story house, will produce 83,000 horsepower each. Combined with two smaller motors, each producing 25,000 horsepower, the two powerful machines will generate enough energy to drive five mammoth compressors which will produce man-made hurricanes for transonic and supersonic wind tunnels.

Westinghouse Electric Corp., which built the motors, also is in the process of constructing the compressors. When the compressors are completed and the entire machine assembled, it will stretch the length of almost two football fields.

Although the machine will represent the highest stored energy of any rotating mass ever built, it will be capable of coming to a complete halt in about three minutes by use of its wound-rotor motors as brakes.

The five compressors now under construction probably will not be completed until next year. The transonic compressor will be a single unit but the other four compressors will be joined to produce the supersonic compressor, which will push air through the tunnels at speeds greater than the speed of sound.

The blades of the compressor, which will weigh almost two-thirds of a ton each, measure two feet across the face, six feet in length, and will rotate on a spindle 18 feet in diameter.

Urges Civil Air Expansion To Augment Military

Former Senator Joseph C. O'Mahoney this week called for an expanded civilian aviation program to augment the nation's military air arm.

"Whatever may be the termination of the existing controversy about the size and character of the United States Air Force," he told a luncheon meeting of the Aviation Writers Association in Washington, D. C., "certainly we must all be agreed that by cooperating to expand civilian airpower we will be creating the elements out of which war power can be built if the need comes."

Mr. O'Mahoney is a member of the Board of Directors of North American Aircraft Systems, Inc.

When World War II began, military aviation was "sadly deficient," and only through the use of civilian planes was it possible to carry off the invasion of North Africa a year ahead of schedule, the former Wyoming legislator stated.

"It therefore becomes more essential now than ever before that civilian air lift power be promoted in every possible way," he declared.

This can be accomplished, he pointed out, by providing freedom of entry to the channels of air commerce and by "encouraging free enterprise in the air."

He discounted arguments that during the present emergency, military air power would suffer in proportion to the degree civilian aviation is expanded.

"Immersed in what we know as a cold war, we cannot give away to the false philosophy of the totalitarians who believe there is not enough to go 'round. The untapped commercial air lift market is tremendous," he said.

"There is room for competition over the continent as well as on the continent to build a strong civilian air arm as a great asset to both the commercial and military might of our Nation. By telling that story to the American public you will play an essential part of showing the world that men and women who believe in freedom and who practice its ethics can lead the world to an era of peace, and scientific progress can save mankind rather than destroy it."

Italy Takes Delivery Of Flying Boxcars

Two Fairchild C-119 troop carrier planes were turned over to the Italian Air Force recently under the U. S. Mutual Defense Assistance Program.

The huge flying boxcars will carry 42 fully-equipped paratroopers or 62 men without equipment.

Maj. Gen. James G. Christiansen, USA, Chief of the Advisory Group in Italy, called the delivery of the planes "another milestone in the common defense effort of Italy and the United States."

The planes were flown to Pisa last month where they were received by General Aldo Urbani, Chief of Staff of the Italian Air Force, and assigned to the 46th Stormo wing of the Italian AF.

Former Navy Lt. Named

Dr. Finn J. Larsen has been named director of research for the Minneapolis-Honeywell Regulator Company.

During WW II, Dr. Larsen served as a Navy lieutenant from 1943 to 1946. He was stationed with the Bureau of Aeronautics in Washington, D. C., where he did design work in radar-type equipment.
